

ABOUT

The North American Post is a community newspaper that celebrates Japanese culture in the Greater Seattle area. Founded by 1st generation Japanese-Americans in 1902, the publication is one of the oldest minority-owned newspapers in the region. Today, with bilingual articles in English and Japanese, the publication connects readers with diverse cultural backgrounds to Seattle's Japanese community. Our articles include local news, event calendars, restaurant reviews, Japanese cooking recipes, community interviews, and more.

Karen Tanaka

65 years old | Married | Retired

I am a 3rd generation Japanese-American. I enjoy traveling abroad with my husband. I am interested in learning about my cultural roots and sharing the history with my grandchildren. I want to stay active by joining community events and social groups.

Jenny Chin

41 years old | Married | Working Mom

I am a mom with two children and work for a local accounting firm. My mother is a Japanese-American who was born and raised in Seattle. I enjoy learning how to prepare Japanese dishes and then sharing the recipes with my friends.

Tom Brown

Age: 28 | Single | IT Bus.-Dev

I work for a high-tech company and often visit Tokyo and other Asian cities for work. I became a fan of Japanese video games as a teenager, which influenced me to study Japanese. I want to be informed about local restaurants, night spots, sake brands and electronic products.
